Medical Director, Dr. Laurie Truog, on behavioral issues...

There are many schools of thought and perspectives on behavioral issues in children. Currently we are in a very exciting time where there is increasing evidence behind the diagnostic screenings and treatments we currently employ. We need to make sure that we consider cultural, genetic, personality and environmental factors when we are treating children. Being aware of other schools of thought is also helpful, so we are able to support our families in navigating what they may be hearing from popular society and not the professional community.
